

Sponsor and Exhibitor Form

The semiconductor industry faces significant challenges to continue increasing performance and functionality of information processing. New and improved metrology and characterization is required to support these advances in density and functionality. We bring together scientists and engineers interested in all aspects of the characterization technology needed for nanoelectronic materials and device research, development, and manufacturing. All approaches are welcome: chemical, physical, electrical, magnetic, optical, in-situ, and real-time control and monitoring. The conference summarizes major issues and provides critical reviews of important semiconductor techniques needed as the semiconductor industry moves to silicon nanoelectronics and beyond.
